important." More than 40 students make up the cast, about 20 others have already signed up to help with crew and lighting, according to DeFoe. Although this week is February rehearsal, every other week students can be seen running lines and dancing across the stage at Cole throughout the seven and a half weeks of rehearsals each week.

"They really love the material," DeFoe said. "When kids are really into what you're doing and what you're presenting, it makes a job much easier."

"They're very smart kids," he added. "They're all working really hard."

The students also get to provide input and have a voice when it comes to directing decisions. Not only does DeFoe believe that multiple heads are better than one, "but that it's important 'all kids feel valued.'" Ideas from students often find their ways into the play.

The bonding between the students is also her amazing part of directing school productions for DeFoe. When it comes time for students to make their final curtain call, it's a bittersweet moment for many students who've grown extremely close with one another over the weeks and months of rehearsal together. It's exciting for them to see what they've accomplished, but sad to see no longer going to be coming together as a group each day to work on the musical. In addition to DeFoe, Pomeroy and Bianco, this year's production has also been made possible thanks to Music Director Jennifer Strong and Danielle Salisbury, who serves as technical director, helping students to put the sets for the play through after-school rehearsal.

"Crazy for You" opens Friday, March 8 at 7 p.m. A second performance will take place on March 9 at 2 p.m. Tickets will be sold at the door for $10.
